[Insert name of Institution] celebrates European heritage by collecting family migration stories in [Insert city/town]

European Year of Cultural Heritage project on migration comes to [country] at [institution] on [date].

[City/Town, publication date 2018] – 2018 is the European Year of Cultural Heritage, and the Europe we live in today is the result of migration, as generation after generation of people have spread across the continent and carried their ideas with them. To celebrate this occasion, [Insert Institution] is working in partnership with Europeana, the European digital platform for cultural heritage, and migration museums across Europe, to invite people young and old, to share the objects that help them tell their own stories of migration.

Events in [Insert country] will take place on [Insert date] at [Insert Institution, city/town].

‘Insert Quote,’ says [name] from [Institution].

‘Everybody has a story to tell about their origins, and the moments that shaped their lives. Europeana is excited to work with [Insert Institution] to encourage people to share those stories and the objects that tell them, and to help us bring them together online. In that way we can celebrate the diversity and richness of the cultural heritage that is being passed on generation after generation, all over Europe,’ says Harry Verwayen, Acting Executive Deputy Director at Europeana.

Blending family stories across Europe

[Institution’s] goal is to discover people’s meaningful family objects, from photographs to letters, postcards and recipes, to help Europeana to tell the story of Europe and the people who live here, online. Objects already collected from across Europe include books, musical instruments, family recipes, jewellery, clothing and even a chair.

These objects and their stories will sit online alongside items from other museums across Europe, helping to paint a bigger picture of European migration movements over the last few centuries. They will be recorded for posterity and made available for all to discover and use for education, research, inspiration and pleasure.

[Institution] invites all visitors to share their family objects and stories to help build this online collection showcasing Europe’s rich history of migration.
